

When you don't know who you are talking to...

39. When one talks over the phone to someone they don't know and don't plan on getting to know, there is no prohibition of greeting. Therefore, one may greet – and inquire about the well-being of – a member of the opposite gender in the following circumstances:

- When speaking with someone who works at a government agency, utility company, etc.
- An employee who works in an office that fields calls from people they do not know and do not intend to know, such as service calls to a large management firm.

Still, one must be vigilant that these conversations do not evolve into excessive conversations with a member of the opposite gender. The parameters of “excessive” will iy”H be clarified in future emails.

(B'tzeil Hachochmah 5:49)

(See upcoming email regarding exceptions to this halachah.)